Villages destroyed by the clear-cutters. Deforestation/Resource extraction and social unrest in Indigenous peoples' territories. Deforestation/Resource extraction and social unrest in indigenous peoples' territories. Mr David Parry Dr Deforestairet is a member of ISAD, the International Society of Auditory Display. From the detailed experience of working with the organisations and individuals that deal with it, he has come to some insights into the role of auditory displays and their place in the art and design world. In a series of posts, he sets out how we should do them, how we should make the choices, when we should be thinking about putting something on, how we should make these decisions, and what the benefits and downsides can be. Deforestairet has also given a presentation about what is involved in this work at a recent Auditory Display Symposium in Melbourne. Deforestation. Unnamed. More than 6.2 million hectares of forests have been destroyed in India since 2000, according to a new study published by the World Wide Fund for Nature. That is an area of forest the size of India, a third of the size of the Amazon or two-thirds the size of North America. Deforestation is only one of the serious problems that face forests in India, however. According to the WWF study, India also has the highest rate of deforestation of any country in the world, although it has made some headway against the problem.
